Stalking Is Not Love - Marie Jones 2014-06-24

Hi my name is Marie Jones and to get started I will tell you a little about me prior to the stalker. The reason for this is so that you understand me and the sometimes not easily understood reasoning of how I have handled certain situations in my life. My upbringing plays a large part in certain decisions I have made as an adult. I don't know why I've always had the issue of placing others happiness before my own. I have a problem hurting people even if I am left hanging unhappy in the balance. At times it is so beyond me how one can misunderstand whether by choice or perception what another is saying or meaning. A person can tell another that they love them and mean it with all their heart and be understood in a way that another did not mean it. On the other hand one can love another and dislike the other's actions and it doesn't deter the love they have for the other in the slightest. They perhaps just wish situations would change, that which turns out would make for a perfect situation or relationship. By the same token one can tell another they don't love them, nor or they attracted to them and they think the other is mentally insane and need to be chemically balanced with medication. Why on God's green earth would anyone want to be in a relationship with a person that don't like or love them??? I have lost weight that I cannot afford to lose and hair that I am ashamed to tell anyone about. Thank God for weave!!!!!! Stress is a battle that I don't need or want.

Psycho-Criminological Approaches to Stalking Behavior - Heng Choon (Oliver) Chan 2020-03-26

Provides multidisciplinary coverage of stalking behavior worldwide from both academic and practical approaches Psycho-Criminological Approaches to Stalking Behavior: The International Perspective is a thorough, up-to-date overview of stalking perpetration and victimization in different regions of the world. This authoritative book brings together contributions from a team of leading scholars and practitioners that discuss a diverse range of interrelated topics and issues relevant to stalking and intrusive behavior from both theoretical and practical contexts. Whereas most of the literature on the subject is written from a Western viewpoint, this unique volume examines empirical research, policies, and practices from Asian and African countries, as well as those from Europe, the Americas, and Australia, to provide a truly global perspective. Divided into three parts, the book first examines theories and research on cross-national differences in stalking among college students, ex-partner stalking in Finland, cyberstalking victimization in Singapore, the heterogeneity of stalking and stalkers in Australia, public familiarity and understanding of stalking/harassing legislation in Australia, the United Kingdom, and the United States, and more. The book's second part focuses on national portraits of stalking in a number of understudied populations, including Lithuania, Spain, Denmark, Portugal, and South Africa. Finally in the third section of the book, the chapters largely emphasize policy and best practice, including the Dutch model of policing stalking, risk assessment and management of stalking in Sweden, psycho-legal responses to online interpersonal harm, the German approach to stopping stalking, the United Kingdom response to assessing and managing stalking, and the work of the Danish Stalking Centre. This important contribution to the field: Offers insights from international professionals applicable in other geographical contexts Discusses the factors that influence social awareness and responses to stalking Explores the importance of victim vulnerability factors when managing risk of stalking Presents real-world case studies of stalking behavior, intimate partner violence, stalking victimization, and statutory and law enforcement efforts Reviews the intervention practices of the support institutions and justice systems of different countries Psycho-Criminological Approaches to Stalking Behavior: The International Perspective is an ideal primary or supplementary text for courses in criminology, criminal justice, forensic psychology, and social and behavioral science, as well as a valuable source of reference for those who deal with offenders or victims of stalking, including law enforcement agents, mental health professionals, legal practitioners, social services personnel, and policy makers.

Diary of a Stalker - Electa Rome Parks 2012-01-01

Electa Rome Parks paints a powerful portrait of a crazed fan who can't seem to close the book on the affair after a one-night-stand with a famous author—and who will stop at nothing to make him hers. Even if that means killing him. . . Bestselling author Xavier Preston is used to women throwing themselves at him. On top of being a successful writer, he's also tall, dark and sexy as sin. He's always relished the attention, in fact, and is ever-willing to entertain the erotic urges of women wanting to get between more than the covers of his novels. Except once he meets Kendall, he decides it's time to put his womanizing ways behind him and devote himself to her entirely. Well, almost. . . Gorgeous Pilar is the last decadent treat Xavier decides he'll help himself to—thinking they are both on the same "no strings" page. Except behind Pilar's fine façade beats the heart of a raving maniac—a fatally attracted fan addicted to the kind of hot loving only Xavier can give her. And she's not about to let him get away from her so easily. So what starts out as a discreet dalliance soon spirals into a deadly game of obsession and pain—which can only have one winner. . .

Coroner's Journal - Louis Cataldie 2007-02-06

During Hurricane Katrina, Dr. Louis Cataldie remained in New Orleans in dangerous and often unbearable conditions to attend to the sick, the injured—and the dead. As chief coroner of Baton Rouge, tending to the dead is Cataldie's job. A little town with big-city problems, Baton Rouge means "Red Stick"—and lives up to its bloody name. Cataldie has faced unusual and disturbing cases, from tracking three serial killers on the loose simultaneously while working the scene of a Malvo/Muhammad Beltway Sniper shooting, to helping apprehend Baton Rouge serial killer Derrick Todd Lee in a controversial case that was featured in an ABC Primetime Live special with Diane Sawyer and Patricia Cornwell. Cataldie's maverick ways have made him a favorite target of the media, but he offers no apologies, and speaks for those who cannot speak for themselves. Graphic and frank, this is his unique, up-close look at his life spent stalking death in the Deep South.

Stalking Victimization in the United States - Katrina Baum 2011-01

This is a print on demand edition of a hard to find publication. Stalking is defined as a course of conduct directed at a specific person that would cause a reasonable person to feel fear. The Supplemental Victimization Survey identified seven types of harassing or unwanted behaviors consistent with a course of conduct experienced by stalking victims. The survey classified individuals as stalking victims if they responded that they experienced at least one of these behaviors on at least two separate occasions. In addition, the individuals must have feared for their safety or that of a family member as a result of the course of conduct, or have experienced additional threatening behaviors that would cause a reasonable person to feel fear. This report presents information on stalking victimization. Illustrations.

Stalking the Angel - Robert Crais 2020-01-28

Meet Elvis Cole, L.A. private eye . . . he quotes Jiminy Cricket and carries a

.38. He's a literate, wisecracking Vietnam vet who is determined never to grow up. The blonde who walked into Cole's office was the best-looking woman he'd seen in weeks. The only thing that kept her from rating a perfect "10" was the briefcase on one arm and the uptight hotel magnate on the other. Bradley Warren had lost something very valuable—something that belonged to someone else: a rare thirteenth-century Japanese manuscript called the Hagakure. Just about all Cole knew about Japanese culture he'd learned from reading Shogun, but he knew a lot about crooks—and what he didn't know his sociopathic sidekick, Joe Pike, did. Together their search begins in L.A.'s Little Tokyo and the nest of notorious Japanese mafia, the yakuza, and leads to a white-knuckled adventure filled with madness, murder, sexual obsession, and a stunning double-whammy ending. For Elvis Cole, it's just another day's work. Praise for Stalking the Angel "Stalking the Angel is a righteous California book: intelligent, perceptive, hard, clean."—James Ellroy "Out on the West Coast, where private eyes thrive like avocado trees, Robert Crais has created an interesting and amusing hero in Elvis Cole."—The Wall Street Journal "Devotees of the rock 'em, sock 'em school should find [Stalking the Angel] tasty."—The San Diego Union

Allegany Stalking - Larry Beahan 2015-12-05

The title "Allegany Stalking" has many meanings. First, as the diving eagle on the cover suggests, it recognizes predators, hunters and fisherman who have stalked fish and game in this region since the last ice age. "Allegany Stalking" means exploring the Park and its vicinity with intentions to enjoy and protect and to exploit it. The intentions of the ghosts described are open to wide speculation. Our first Stalker is the Seneca, Billy Abrams. He is an expert fur trapper and fisherman who is even better known as a boxer. Randy John is as devoted and expert a fisherman as he is a Professor of Sociology. Both do most of their stalking in Allegany State Park and in the adjacent territory of the Seneca Nation. Wally Michaels knows every hill and hollow of the Park. He has hunted them more than 60 years. "Listen Up, Woods" is a poem that walks or stalks you through Allegany woods. Its author has been offended by poison ivy more than once. Some who stalk the woods have seen the spirits of early settlers, woeful Indians and tragic Irish maidens. An unimpeachable source testifies to the haunting of even the venerable Administration Building. But the mysterious Flannel Man is the ghost who most often affords us a glimpse of himself as he appears and disappears almost anywhere in the Park. Boy Scouts and Cross Country Skiers do stalk and have stalked the trails of the Park by the thousands. We are reminded of legends and legendary figures of the Park as we traverse the trails and places named for them; Quaker, Tunesassa, Dowd, Fancher. Railroads and lumberman have come and gone. Oil and Gas companies have done their stalking in search of black gold buried beneath the mountains and valleys of the Park. They have left scars, now mostly hidden by a hundred years growth of forest. Unfortunately National Fuel still owns a 9000-acre lease in the heart of the Park, despite angry protests against them.

Stalking the Wild Asparagus - Euell GIBBONS 2020-04

Nearly sixty years ago an unknown writer named Euell Gibbons (1911-1975) presented a book on gathering wild foods to the New York publisher David McKay Co. Together they settled on the title, Stalking the Wild Asparagus. No one expected that this iconic title would become part of the American language, nor did they anticipate the revival of interest in natural food and in environmental preservation in which this book played a major role. Euell Gibbons became an unlikely celebrity and made many television appearances. Stalking the Wild Asparagus has sold the better part of half a million copies since the original publication and has been continuously in print since 1962. Euell Gibbons was one of the few people in this country to devote a considerable part of his life to the adventure of living off the land. He sought out wild plants all over North America and turned ordinary fruits and vegetable into delicious dishes. His book includes recipes for vegetable and casserole dishes, breads, cakes, muffins and twenty different pies. Plus jellies, jams, teas, and wines, and how to sweeten them with wild honey or homemade maple syrup.

Stalking and Violence - Stephen J. Morewitz 2003

Stalking and Violence: New Patterns of Obsession and Trauma provides new perspectives on the prevalence, causes, and effects of stalking in intimate and non-intimate relations. Drawing on the results of a large random survey of restraining orders, this book found that stalking is highly prevalent in a variety of relationships and is a pattern of behaviors that is routinely regulated by the demographic and social characteristics of the victims and offenders. This book demonstrates that it is possible to develop reliable stalker profiles to help better detect and respond to the threat of stalking. These findings differ from previous studies that considered stalking limited to severely disturbed persons. Covering a wide range of topics from offender profiling, the dangers of stalking, cyberstalking, traumatic health effects, and the responses of the police and courts to stalking, this book will be relevant to a wide range of professionals and students in the fields of mental health, criminal justice, law, social work, medicine, nursing, public health, security/safety, and internet technology.

Perspectives on Stalking - Roland D. Maiuro, PhD 2015-11-13

Each year an estimated 3.4 million men and women become victims of stalking. While a man in a black coat following a girl in a dark alley is the media's stereotypical portrayal of stalking, there is actually a wide range of behavior that can be defined as such. Stalking—characterized by harassment, repeated calling, sending inappropriate letters or gifts, unsuitable use of social media, confrontation, and other unwanted behaviors—is a worldwide problem that is on the rise, especially the incidence and prevalence of cyberstalking. This book presents a collection of prominent articles published in the peer-reviewed journal Violence and Victims, written by experts on stalking from a variety of social science disciplines. Authors present research related to stalking victims and perpetrators, cyberstalking, how to identify stalking, and stalking in a variety of settings with a focus on college campuses. College students, many of whom are relatively new to intimate relationships, are especially prone to becoming stalked or perpetrating stalking. Several articles in this collection address stalking within the college population, including an empirical study of stalking victimization in men and women and a discussion of coping strategies at a Finnish university. Authors examine varying perceptions and attitudes toward stalking on campus, and discuss how to draw the line between courtship behavior and stalking. Personality attributes of stalkers include, according to one study, less social competence and a greater tendency to display borderline behaviors. Studies also address the relationship between stalking and gender, the stalking experiences of battered women, and the growing incidence of cyberstalking. This book will provide a solid research foundation toward understanding and controlling stalking behaviors, which can potentially lead to more serious abuse. Key Features: Disseminates the most acclaimed research articles on stalking from the peer-reviewed journal Victims and Violence Authored by well-known stalking experts from varied social science disciplines Explores stalking in numerous settings including college campuses Presents research on perpetrators and victims of stalking Examines cyberstalking

Female Victims of Stalking - Modena Group on Stalking 2005

The Appeal of Stalking - Stan Talbott 2011-11

In 21st Century Society, "Stalking" connotes a myriad of imagery and numerous definitions. Ask any female adult and she has either directly been a "victim" of "stalking," or she has a friend who has been a victim. Stalkers are no longer simply the lurkers in the shadows from the "Stalking" films of the 20th Century. Stalkers come in all shapes and sizes and socio-economic backgrounds. In addition to preying on their victims, stalkers can be apprehended for "following" in other ways including e-mail communication, texting, and even inappropriate posts on Facebook. In The Appeal of Stalking, Billy Freeman is accused of stalking his exwife, Diane Downer, after Downer attempts to take custody of their six year-old grandson, Trystan. Trystan's mother, Faith Freeman, enters a "family-friendly" alcohol rehab facility, but with the help of Trystan's illegal alien father, Erasmo, Downer seizes Trystan and places him into the first grade, rather than kindergarten where he was destined to be placed under his mother's care. Downer's animosity toward her daughter stems from an earlier incident when Faith was stalked by her mother's dream man: television star, Matthew Fox. Stan Talbott recently retired from his job as a Portland, Oregon-based financial advisor to embark on his full-time writing career. Talbott, a passionate advocate for the Constitution, First Amendment, and Freedom of Expression, is currently working, triathlon training, researching, and composing his next stories in his Central Oregon homeland.

Stalking on College Campuses - Jose Ramos 2016

The goal of this study was to explore the extent of the stalking problem on college and university campuses, the vital elements that should be included in an effective stalking policy, and the way campus authorities are responding to stalking allegations and investigations. For the purpose of this study, college and university websites from New York and Massachusetts were reviewed in order to ascertain whether the stalking policies of these two northeastern higher educational institutions met the 'key essential elements' of the Model Stalking Policy as recommended by the Stalking Resource Center. The truth of the matter is that the startling number of stalking cases on college and university campuses merit attention. The Center for Control and Disease Prevention (2011) pointed out that most victims of stalking range between the ages of 18 to 24 (Black, M. C., Basile, K. C., et al., 2011, p.34). Similar findings were shown by a Bureau of Justice Report in which during a 12-month period, "an estimated 3.4 million persons age 18 or older were victims of stalking" (Baum, Catalano, & Rand, 2010, p.1). The crime of stalking is a prelude to other serious offenses. Fisher, Cullen and Turner (2000) found that in 10 percent of stalking incidents, victims reported that the stalker "forced or attempted sexual contact" (p.35). Faced with a rash of cases in which victims were coming forward with allegations that colleges and universities were mishandling their sexual assault/stalking cases, President Obama signed into law the SAVE Act and created the Task Force to require more transparency and accountability in the way colleges and universities handle and investigate sexual assault and stalking cases. A well-written and comprehensive campus stalking policy will send the message to the campus constituency that stalking is being taken seriously. Thus, the results of this study will shed light on how colleges and universities are dealing with stalking and whether their campus stalking policies are in compliance with the essential elements of the Model Stalking Policy.

Stalking in the Netherlands - Suzan van der Aa 2010

Writing love letters, making phone calls, and sending gifts, these are all seemingly innocuous behaviours. This changes when the love expressed in the letters remains unrequited, when the phone calls amount to hundreds a night, or when the gifts consist of bullets and funeral wreaths. When attempts to contact another person happen with a certain nature and frequency, the behaviour can be qualified as stalking and it can have a detrimental impact on the life of the person subjected to the unwanted attention. In this book an account is given of the nature and prevalence of the problem of stalking in the Netherlands, of the effectiveness and the (dis)advantages of resorting to the police, and of the pros and cons of two alternative anti-stalking measures: hiring the services of a private investigation and protection agency and obtaining a civil restraining order.

Stalking Recidivism and Risk Assessment - Daniel Eden Shea 2015

Scientific interest exploded after the crime of stalking was created in the early nineties. It is now generally recognised that stalking can result in significant disruption, distress and, for some victims, physical harm or even death. It is thus noteworthy that, while stalking may be distinctively protracted in nature and features well-established links with violence, very little research has been devoted to the issue of repeat offending (recidivism) among stalkers.

Nevertheless, the likelihood of continued or repeat offending remains a key concern for forensic clinicians, courts, police and legislators, who are ultimately responsible for minimising the incidence and impact of stalking. As such, it is important to devise appropriate methods by which this risk can be evaluated and managed. Given the paucity of studies specifically examining recidivism among stalkers, existing findings are in need of both replication and expansion. Accordingly, this research project sought to identify the demographic, psychiatric, and offending-related variables related to recidivism among stalkers. The project also set out to evaluate the two extant stalking-specific risk assessment tools with respect to recidivism. A case-linkage methodology was employed to combine data drawn from state-wide criminal records and forensic mental health records. Participants were clients of a community-based forensic mental health service who were originally recruited as part of other research projects. Each had presented to the clinic for stalking behaviour, either between 2002 and 2007, or between 2010 and 2011. When the index referral related to multiple cases of stalking, each case was evaluated separately. Consequently, analyses were conducted by case (n = 163) rather than participant (n = 146). Offending follow-up data were unavailable for some cases (N = 15); hence, these were excluded from analyses explicitly relating to recidivism outcomes. Altogether, this research project comprised three related studies. The first examined the demographic, historical, clinical and offence-specific variables of stalkers. Analyses were conducted to identify which combinations of these factors best predicted stalking, violent and general recidivism among stalkers. All cases for which recidivism data were available were evaluated (N = 148). Overall, stalking recidivism was best predicted by a model that included traits of personality disorder, criminal history, the presence of an Axis I disorder, index stalking duration of no less than two weeks, and the use of proximity-seeking approach behaviours during the index stalking episode. When considering only the original victim, all of these factors except criminal history remained valuable predictors; however, the combination of criminal history, prior stalking and having stalked a stranger during the index episode was most predictive of stalking recidivism against a new victim. General recidivism was best predicted by a combination of criminal history, stranger stalking victim, Axis I disorder, and traits of personality disorder. Using a broad definition of violence that included stalking and threats, violent recidivism was best predicted by traits of personality disorder, criminal history and Axis I disorder. When this was restricted to actual or attempted physical violence, recidivism was best predicted by the use of diverse stalking behaviours during the index episode and the absence of psychotic disorder. While the first study sought to replicate and extend findings from past research on stalking recidivism, the second and third evaluated the properties, predictive and construct-related validity of the two existing stalking-specific risk assessment tools, the Guidelines for Stalking Assessment and Management (SAM: Kropp, Hart, & Lyon, 2008) and the Stalking Risk Profile (SRP: MacKenzie et al.,

2009). While the entire sample (n = 163) was used for most analyses, only those for whom offending data were available (N = 148) were included in predictive validity analyses. Inter-rater reliability (IRR) for the SAM was generally moderate, although this varied depending on the level at which this was evaluated (e.g., conclusory opinions, domain scores or item ratings). Nature of Stalking (N) and Perpetrator Risk (P) domain scores were highly internally consistent, and Lifetime total, domain and item scores were, by and large, modestly related to conclusory opinions for Case Prioritisation, Future Stalking and Serious Physical Harm. Respectively, Case Prioritisation and Future Stalking ratings were modestly and highly accurate for predicting later stalking of index victims. Lifetime total and N domain scores also featured good predictive accuracy, while P scores were only modestly predictive. With respect to construct validity, SAM conclusory opinions were all related to SRP risk ratings in theoretically predictable ways. Like the SAM, IRR for the SRP varied based on the level of evaluation. Agreement was substantial for assignment to motivational typology, Violence and Persistence risk judgements, and moderate for the remaining risk ratings. Agreement was moderate-to-substantial for domain scores, and ranged between fair and substantial for most items. As expected, due to the intended independence of risk factors, internal consistency was generally modest for SRP domain scores. Typically, domain and item scores were associated with the corresponding risk ratings for all stalker types. Risk ratings for stalking Persistence, Recurrence against index victims and Recurrence involving new victims all featured good predictive accuracy. Interestingly, the discriminatory performance of numerically derived domain scores (versus clinicians' risk judgements) did not differ from chance for any domain or stalker type. Taken as a whole, this research supports the notion that stalkers represent a diverse population, one that poses particular challenges for adequate risk assessment. Indeed, it is clear that an adequate evaluation of stalking-related risks must consider not only past offending, psychopathology and social context, but also specific stalking behaviours and victim selection. Of particular note is the finding that stalking recidivism is associated with somewhat different factors depending on whether the stalker targets their original victim or another. While findings provide support for the utility of the SAM and SRP, it is suggested that both tools would benefit from further validation research and ongoing refinement. Implications of the current results for clinicians, police and legislators are discussed.
